ABOUT THE TRAINING PROGRAMME

Clinical Linguistics is the application of linguistic concepts, theories, and methods to the study of language disorders. It involves the application of linguistic theories and procedures to the study, characterization, assessment, and treatment of communication disorders. The field is interdisciplinary and has relevance to theoretical and applied linguistics, speech-language pathology, psychology, education, and related disciplines.

The Hands-on Training Programme aims to provide a strong foundation for young students and scholars pursuing studies in Linguistics, Applied Linguistics, Clinical Linguistics, Psycholinguistics, and other related disciplines. The programme seeks to impart comprehensive knowledge of Clinical Linguistics and its applications in the assessment and management of language and speech disorders. It is designed to strengthen the academic and professional competencies of postgraduate students, research scholars, faculty members, and professionals working in the fields of linguistics and allied disciplines.

The programme will provide participants with valuable insights into several key areas, including language development from birth to six or seven years of age, language processing, storage, and production in the brain, and the nature of developmental and acquired language disorders. Participants will also gain an understanding of typical and atypical language data and learn methods for distinguishing between typical and disordered speech and language.

Furthermore, the training will include practical sessions on language data collection, transcription, glossing, language assessment techniques, planning remedial interventions, and building corpora of typical and atypical language samples.

The programme consists of 18 hours of teaching and practical training, with equal emphasis on theory (50%) and hands-on practical sessions (50%). Sessions will be conducted by eminent national and international experts from academia and industry.
